INTRODUCTION

As part of Valdez's efforts to undermine the Legislature's reforms by creating the Medical Provider Network (MPN) system, she seeks to distract the Court by attacking references to materials to which she is otherwise unable to respond. Her misguided motion to strike attacks three categories of materials: reports and studies which reflect the broader practical and policy implications of a ruling on these issues; amici letters submitted pursuant to California Rule of Court Rule 8.500(g); and portions of the certified record filed by the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board (WCAB) at the Court of Appeal's request. The motion is mistaken on all counts and simply disregards the well established practice of this Court, the rules of court and, inexplicably, the certified record as prepared and submitted by the WCAB. The motion is a mere diversion and should be denied in its entirety.

With regard to the first category, Valdez misunderstands judicial notice, which is a means of resolving factual or legal issues in a case by accepting the truth and accuracy of designated materials, and thus avoids the burden of a formal proof on each point. This process is simply inapplicable to the reports commissioned or conducted by the Department of Industrial Relations regarding workers' compensation. These reports are not referenced for the purpose of resolving a factual dispute regarding Valdez's claim, but in consideration of the larger policy implications of the Court's decision and, further, to provide the Department of Industrial Relations' perspective on how MPNs operate.

In similar fashion, Valdez mistakenly argues that parties may not refer to any materials unless they are in the appellate record or judicially noticed. In fact, courts commonly rely upon and cite to a wide variety of authorities without the need for judicial notice, since the courts do not use the materials to make a factual determination in the case, but rather to better understand the issues, and the practical implications of their contemplated rulings.

Valdez is likewise misguided in her request to strike any reference to the amici letters filed with the Court in support of granting review. She makes no claim that these letters were not properly submitted and served, or that Defendant misrepresented their contents. Despite the letters' proper submission to the Court, Valdez argues, with little reasoning and no authority or rational basis, to ignore them.

Lastly and most bizarrely, Valdez attacks the certified record itself, essentially arguing that the certified record should be modified to delete those portions of the record that the Workers Compensation Judge (WCJ) erroneously ignored. However, the Court of Appeal instructed the WCAB to file a certified record of all documents it reviewed in reaching its en banc decisions, and the WCAB complied. In any case, Defendant has challenged the WCJ's error at every stage thereafter, putting these exhibits at issue. Notwithstanding, Valdez argues that the error of the WCJ in deferring the MPN issues should be compounded by barring any reviewing court from considering these documents. There plainly is no basis for deleting portions of the certified record as prepared by the WCAB.

In sum, Valdez cannot respond to the legitimate points Defendant raised in the Opening Brief on the Merits, and, instead, endeavors to avoid their import by having some of Defendant's supporting materials taken out of consideration. These materials will assist the Court in resolving the issues at bar. The motion to strike should be denied.

LEGAL DISCUSSION

I.

THIS COURT CUSTOMARILY CONSIDERS AUTHORITATIVE REPORTS AND STUDIES WHEN CONSIDERING THE POTENTIAL POLICY IMPLICATIONS OF ITS RULINGS.

Judicial notice is a means by which a court can accept “the existence of a matter of law or fact that is relevant to an issue in the action without requiring formal proof of the matter.” (Lockley v. Law Office of Cantrell (2001) 91 Cal.App.4th 875, 882.) It is a convenience that allows courts and parties to forgo the burden of a formal proof on issues which, based on the reliable and authoritative documents listed in Evidence Code sections 451 and 452, should not be controversial. In the same fashion, it also promotes consistency between decisions regarding such issues. However, this process has no application to the studies and reports that are the target of Valdez’s motion.

Valdez confuses the nature of judicial notice (which is a means of addressing factual or legal disputes) with a broader consideration of legal and policy issues from available authorities. Each case on which Valdez’s motion relies addresses judicial notice in the context of a specific factual dispute in the subject case. (E.g., Lockley v. Law Office of Cantrell (2001) 91 Cal.App.4th 875, 882-883 [error to take judicial notice of the truth of statements made in separate non-adversarial proceeding to resolve factual disputes in present case]; Fremont Indemnity Co. v. Fremont General Corp. (2007) 148 Cal.App.4th 97, 113-114 [court unwilling to judicially notice the meaning of the subject letter agreement at demurrer stage]; StorMedia Inc. v. Superior Court (1999) 20 Cal.4th 449, 456, n.9 [court judicially noticed documents addressing the factual issues because both parties referred to them in their papers and judicial notice was not opposed].)

None analyzes the propriety of citing materials relevant to deciding legal or policy issues.

Also misplaced, and unsupported by the authorities she cites, is Valdez's argument that only documents within the appellate record can be considered for any reason. For example, Valdez cites Lona v. Citibank, NA. (2011) 202 Cal.App.4th 89, in which claims of judicial bias against the trial judge were dismissed because there was nothing in the record to support the claim. (Id., at 102; and see Motion at 9.)¹ Similarly, Doppes v. Bentley Motors, Inc. (2009) 174 Cal.App.4th 967, declined to consider assertions about conduct and communications between the parties which were not supported by the record. (Id., at 990 and n. 4.) Neither case stands for the proposition that authoritative practice guides, commentaries, studies or reports cannot be considered when weighing the implications of the Court's decision or to provide additional perspective on the legal principles involved.

In stark contrast to the cases above, the studies and reports which Valdez targets in her motion to strike do not address any factual dispute related to her claim; rather, they address the broader issues and legal principles involved in the operation and significance of MPNs. This Court has customarily cited to such outside studies, reports and law review articles when considering the broader policy implications of its rulings, without any request or grant of judicial notice. (E.g., O'Neil v. Crane Co. (2012) 53 Cal.4th 335, 353-354, n 9 [citing numerous commentators, including a RAND study, on the practice of asbestos plaintiff litigants to sue "ever-more peripheral defendants" after the manufacturers went bankrupt.]; People v. Holt (1997) 15 Cal.4th 619, 702 ["Recent studies establish that even college-educated jurors are unable to define mitigation in a legally correct manner.”]; People v. Brown (1994) 8 Cal.4th 746, 757-758, & n. 5 [relying on law review articles, commentators, and studies on sexual assault; see id., at p. 761: “recent studies demonstrate that the absence of such a prompt complaint is not a reliable indicator that a sexual offense has not occurred,...”]; People v. Jones (1990) 51 Cal.3d 294, 315 [citing recent empirical studies regarding reliability of child witnesses]; Riverisland Cold Storage, Inc. v. Fresno-Madera Production Credit Ass. (2013) 55 Cal.4th 1169, 1179-1180 [noting “most commentators” rejected the prior California rule]; and see 2 Cal. Civil Appellate Practice (CEB 3rd ed. 2012), § 22.57, p. 1150 [this Court will frequently look to authoritative commentators to consider a broader context].²

Valdez disregards this Court’s common (and justifiable) practice of referring to practice guides, law review articles, legal commentators and authoritative reports and studies necessary for the court to consider the potential effects and merits of its decision – a practice which has nothing to do with judicial notice. More telling, perhaps, is that Valdez has no other response to these reports and the conclusions they reach, but to ask the Court to bury them.

II.

THERE IS NO BASIS TO STRIKE REFERENCE TO AMICI LETTERS SUBMITTED IN COMPLIANCE WITH THE RULES OF COURT.

As the Court is aware, there were 19 amici curiae letters submitted in support of granting review in this matter, most on behalf of governmental agencies. Valdez cites no authority and offers only superficial and unpersuasive reasoning when she argues that these letters, served and submitted in compliance with California Rules of Court, Rule 8.500(g), nonetheless should be ignored and discarded. The letters, as referred to in the Opening Brief (at pp. 16-17), were not cited as evidence to address any question of fact regarding Valdez's claim. Rather, Defendant referenced them in discussing the broader policy implications of this Court's decision and the prevalent use of MPNs by public entities, as reported by those entities themselves. Indeed, the wide-spread concern about the policy implications of the Court of Appeal's decision, which implicates the continued viability of MPNs, motivated the many amici letters urging review.

² In similar fashion the CAAA amicus brief to the Court of Appeal cites to commentators and practice guides, as well as a dictionary, without seeking any judicial notice. (CAAA brief at 7, 15 and 18.)

Consistent with Defendant's reference to the amicus letters, this Court has previously acknowledged and commented on amicus letters when relevant to the issues. (E.g., In re Farm Raised Salmon Cases (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 1077, 1089, n 11 [court refers to an amicus letter as part of chain of discussion in which a specific issue was addressed]; State Personnel Bd. v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1985) 39 Cal.3d 422, 431, n 10 [court notes it received "numerous letters and briefs amicus curiae" and summarizes their common position on the issues]; People v. Mooc (2001) 26 Cal.4th 1216, 1220-1221, n 1 [listing the large number of amici letters and briefs received in support of the petition for review].) In a similar fashion, this Court certainly can and should consider the letters received in this case as statements by outside persons who have a tangible interest in the legal issues being reviewed, and a stake in its outcome, and take into consideration the concerns and statements of these interested persons.

III.

THE INEXPLICABLE ATTEMPT TO STRIKE THE CERTIFIED RECORD SUBMITTED BY THE WCAB MUST BE REJECTED.

On March 19, 2012, the Court of Appeal issued an order which stated, in pertinent part:

“[The WCAB is] hereby directed to certify and return to this court on or before April 12, 2012, a full and correct copy of the records and documents reviewed by the Board on the petition for reconsideration in the matter designated in your files as Elayne Valdez v. Workers’ Compensation Appeals Board et al., so that the same may be reviewed by this court.” (Ex. A, Court of Appeal Docket, Order 3/19/12.) (Emphasis added.)

In compliance with this instruction, the WCAB filed two certified volumes of record with the court on April 9, 2012. (See, ex. B and Walsh Declaration, ¶ 3.) Subsequently, on April 11, 2012, the WCAB served a copy of this record by email on each of the parties and an amicus. (Ex. C; Walsh Declaration, ¶ 4; and see Reply To WCAB Answer Brief On The Merits at p. 4, n 4.) Defendant cited to this record in subsequent briefs, as did an amicus brief filed with the Court of Appeal. Valdez made no objection at that time to the certified record or any citations to it.³ There is no basis for striking any portion of the certified record as prepared by the WCAB.

Valdez offers two equally wrongheaded arguments for modifying the certified record by striking portions of it. First, she claims that since the WCJ (improperly) ignored certain portions of the record relating to Defendant’s MPN, no reviewing court can consider them. Second, since ³ Oddly, nine months after it was provided to the parties and after multiple briefs had cited to it, Valdez claimed for the first time that she did not have the WCAB record as part of a request for an extension of time.

Defendant supposedly failed to challenge the WCJ's error in disregarding the MPN issues, they waived any consideration of the related exhibits. (Motion at 14.) Both arguments are nonsense.

The documents in question were identified at trial as Defendant's exhibits B and C. (WCAB Record at 103:19-22, and 121-129.) These documents primarily address Defendant's MPN, including the MPN notices provided to Valdez, the written confirmation she signed acknowledging the MPN, and communications on how to schedule treatment within the MPN and listing her choices for medical care. (Id., and Opening Brief at 3-6.) These documents were not admitted because the WCJ erroneously deferred the so-called "MPN" issues as "not relat[ing] to temporary disability." (WCAB Record 103:7-9; and at 73, 74 and 76.) The WCJ then relied exclusively on the reports of the non-MPN physicians selected by Valdez's counsel to find that Valdez was entitled to temporary disability. (See ex. 6 at 31-32.) In fact, the WCJ should have confirmed that the MPN was properly established and that notice was provided to Valdez, and on that basis excluded those outside medical reports which addressed Valdez's diagnosis and treatment.

The first issue offered by Valdez simply disregards the nature of the Court of Appeal's review. Pursuant to Labor Code section 5950, the Court of Appeal is authorized to review the final decision of the "appeals board ... following reconsideration." Therefore, the relevant judgment is the one entered by the WCAB and the proper appellate record consists of what the WCAB considered in making its decision on reconsideration. The WCAB has filed its certified record of those documents. Valdez offers no basis for disputing the record certification by the WCAB.

The waiver argument is similarly unfounded. Valdez erroneously claims that the WCJ made an "evidentiary ruling" regarding the MPN documents. (Motion at 14.) In fact, there was no ruling on the admissibility of this evidence. Instead, as noted above, the WCJ mistakenly set aside any consideration of MPN issues and the related documents. In doing so, the WCJ disregarded Defendant's repeated requests to address this issue. (WCAB Record 103:7-9; and at 73, 74 and 76.) Defendant directly challenged the WCJ's actions in its Petition for Reconsideration to the WCAB, which argued that Valdez's outside doctor reports must be excluded in light of the MPN. (WCAB Record at 139:12-20, 194:18-19, 195:23-196:3.) This argument necessarily challenged the WCJ's error in failing to consider the MPN exhibits and in deferring the MPN issue. As such, these issues were actively pursued at all times by Defendant and, therefore, preserved for appellate review.

With regard to the issue of Defendant's MPN, there was never any dispute that Defendant has an MPN and that Valdez initially treated within it. (E.g., Valdez Ans. Brief at 7-8; Opinion at 2; and see Opening Brief at 4-5.) The potential issues raised, as a matter of course by the applicants' bar, is whether Defendant had properly established the MPN and also satisfied the technical notice requirements for Valdez, since failure to do so would have allowed her to disregard the MPN.⁴ Defendant has always acknowledged that the issue of whether the MPN was properly established and noticed was never adjudicated. (E.g., Opening Brief at 4, n. 2; Pet. for Review at 5, n. 2.) Indeed, it is unnecessary to adjudicate this issue to address the meaning and effect of Labor Code section 4616.6. (See, WCAB Record at 195 n. 2.) In this context, it is proper to point out that the evidence shows Valdez was given proper notice of the MPN, should the issue ever be adjudicated. Making this observation is not grounds to strike a portion of the brief.

⁴ Under SB 863, these loopholes have been closed. As of January 1, 2013, the validity of an MPN is conclusively presumed once approved by the director and the failure to satisfy the notice requirements, by itself, is insufficient to avoid treating within the MPN, so long there was no denial of medical care. (Lab. Code §§ 4616, subd. (b)(1) and 4616.3, subd. (b), respectively.)

CONCLUSION

Apparently concerned that her arguments cannot withstand scrutiny under review, with the complete certified record and consideration of the practical and policy implications of the Court's decision, Valdez has moved to strike materials commonly and properly relied upon by the Court. For the reasons stated, the motion to strike should be denied in its entirety.

Subject: Elayne Valdez v. WCAB, 2nd Civ. No. B237147 - WCAB's certified record

Dear Counsel: This is the first of two e-mails by which the WCAB is sending you an electronic copy of the certified record it filed with the Court of Appeal. It is being sent in two e-mails because of limits that the WCAB's server places on attachments.

This first e-mail consists of the certification and index and parts 1 and 2 of the record itself. The second e-mail will include part 3 of the record.

Please reply to this e-mail if you do not receive all of the attachments or if you otherwise have any problems.

PS to Mr. Rondeau: The emails for Mr. Clark and Mr. Barth were not on the State Bar website, so I will leave it to you to forward this to them if you see fit.
