APPLICATION

Pursuant to the California Rules of Court, rule 8.520(f), the 51 law firms identified on Exhibit A hereto (the “Amici Law Firms”) respectfully request leave to file an amicus curiae brief in support of Plaintiff and Respondent, Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton, LLP (“Sheppard Mullin”), and in opposition to Defendant and Appellant J-M Manufacturing Company, Inc. (“J-M”).

STATEMENT OF INTEREST

The Amici Law Firms include firms with a single California office, multiple California offices, multiple offices in multiple states, and in some instances multiple international offices. These firms range in size from two lawyers on up, and their practices cover a broad range of civil and criminal litigation, alternative dispute resolution, legal ethics counseling, and business and transactional matters.

The Amici Law Firms respectfully submit that the ability of clients and lawyers to order their relationships would be compromised on the important issues of arbitrability, informed consent to conflicts, and fee forfeiture if the novel positions of J-M and the court of appeal were accepted by this Court. The purpose of California’s ethical rules—“to protect the public and to promote respect and confidence in the legal profession”—would be undercut rather than advanced by limiting the free choice of California clients and lawyers. The Amici Law Firms’ collective experience is that arbitration provisions and informed consent provisions are commonplace in engagement letters, are necessary in the modern world, and are understood and negotiated by clients and their lawyers.

J-M’s proclamation that the duty of loyalty “goes to the very heart of the attorney-client relationship” (J-M Answer Brief at 1) does not justify upsetting settled law and expectations governing the arbitration of lawyer-client disputes, adopting unworkable and unfair requirements for informed consent, or imposing fee forfeitures without regard to lawyer good faith or the extent, if any, of client harm. If the absolutist view of J-M and the court of appeal were to prevail in this State, the detriment to California clients and lawyers would be far-reaching:

- Clients of California lawyers could no longer depend upon the confidentiality, efficiency and other benefits of agreed-upon (and legislatively encouraged) arbitration.
- Clients of California lawyers would be uniquely restrained from negotiating and relying on consents to conflicts that allow clients to engage the lawyers of their choice on the matters of their choice and that allow lawyers to accept representations on the strength of such consents.
- Clients of California lawyers would be encouraged to magnify even innocent, remote and harmless conflicts in order to assert that they should not have to pay for the valuable services they have received.

The Amici Law Firms respectfully request leave to file the attached amici curiae brief for each of these reasons and for the reasons set forth in the brief itself.

In accordance with the requirements of the California Rules of Court, rule 8.520(f), Peter R. Jarvis and his law firm, Holland & Knight LLP, are the authors of this brief, and no other person or entity have made or will make any monetary contribution towards the preparation and filing of this brief. Mr. Jarvis is a co-author of Hazard, Jr., Hodes, and Jarvis, The Law of Lawyering (4th Ed. 2015). He is also the Co-Leader of Holland & Knight LLP's Legal Profession Team, which primarily counsels lawyers, law firms and corporate and government legal departments on lawyer professional responsibility and risk management issues. Mr. Jarvis has written and spoken extensively on the California Rules of Professional Conduct and the ABA Model Rules, including with respect to conflicts of interest and informed consent to conflicts waiver issues, for decades.

INTRODUCTION

I. Summary and Overview

The Amici Law Firms request that this Court reverse the court of appeal and: reject J-M's assault on the arbitrability of lawyer-client disputes; clarify the standards for the validity of informed consent to conflicts; and confirm that the harsh remedy of fee forfeiture requires much more than a post hoc assertion of an allegedly "serious" conflict. The Amici Law Firms submit that the position taken by J-M and the court of appeal on each of these issues is inconsistent with current, accepted practices in California and elsewhere.

A rule allowing assertions of conflicts of interest to defeat agreed-upon arbitration provisions would prevent lawyers and clients from securing the predictability and confidentiality they elected at the outset of their relationship when they knowingly and intentionally chose arbitration as the forum for resolution of disputes. A great many clients welcome arbitration and, indeed demand arbitration clauses in their engagement agreements because they know that if a lawyer-client relationship does degenerate, their privileged communications will be kept from the public record and the dispute will be resolved without intrusive and expensive discovery.

Even were it within this Court's purview to create an exception to the legislative policy in favor of arbitration, such an exception would be ill-advised. There is no evidence that the results of arbitrated lawyer-client disputes are skewed against clients. There also is no evidence that clients are compelled by law firms to accept arbitration provisions as contracts of adhesion, and Amici Law Firms' experience is to the contrary. This case is devoid of any suggestion that J-M did not want an arbitration provision in its engagement agreement (the "Agreement").

It is also the longstanding experience of the Amici Law Firms that informed consent to both present and future conflicts play a critical role in allowing clients of all sizes to hire lawyers of their choice from firms of all sizes and on matters of the clients' choice. Consent or waivers of pure duty-of-loyalty conflicts, where there is no realistic risk of prejudice or leakage of confidential information, are particularly commonplace. Requests for such waivers are also easy for clients to understand—especially where, as here, the client from whom consent was sought was sophisticated and represented by independent counsel. A rule that increases the risk of unenforceability of clear and agreed-upon conflicts waivers, whether present or future, would adversely affect both California lawyers and present and prospective clients. Moreover, no such rule exists in other jurisdictions.

The Amici Law Firms can readily agree that truly unsophisticated clients who do not have the benefit of independent counsel may need more disclosure than sophisticated and separately-represented entities. Nonetheless, it is also true that sophisticated consumers of legal services (some hiring scores of law firms each year in numerous matters) equipped with ever-growing ranks of in-house and outside counsel do not need the protection of singular California-imposed vetoes of such consents. The Amici Law Firms agree with the commentators who have studied the relationship between outside and inside counsel and concluded that inside counsel's "once-inferior status has been elevated and [inside counsel] now allocate, guide, control and supervise the work of outside counsel." (Whelan and Ziv, Privatizing Professionalism: Client Control of Lawyers' Ethics (May 2012) 80 Fordham L.Rev. 2577, 2583.) The commentators also note that "OC [Outside Counsel] Guidelines [from corporate clients], requirements, and procedures are commonplace." (Id. at 2585.)

Finally, no state has imposed the equitable remedy of fee forfeiture, let alone full fee forfeiture, without considering such factors as the presence or absence of lawyer good faith and client harm. This Court should not put California in a class by itself and, in so doing, destabilize thousands of existing and future lawyer-client relationships as clients are presented with arguments that might encourage them to try to avoid contractual obligations to pay their lawyers as agreed for services provided.

II. Public Policy Does Not Invalidate an Agreement to Arbitrate A Case In Which A Violation of the Professional Rules Is Alleged.

This Court should not create a rule that lawyer-client arbitration clauses are unenforceable whenever a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct (“RPCs”) in general or the conflicts rules in particular is alleged to exist or, indeed, is found to exist. “[T]hose who enter into arbitration agreements expect that their dispute will be resolved without necessity for any contact with the courts,” and “when the allocation of a matter to arbitration or the courts is uncertain, we resolve all doubts in favor of arbitration.” (Sandquist v. Lebo Automotive, Inc. (2016) 1 Cal.5th 233, 247 [205 Cal.Rptr.3d 359, 376 P.3d 506] [emphasis in original, internal citations omitted].) Arbitration provisions such as the one contained in the Agreement must be enforced in accordance with their terms.

Even the court of appeal did not purport to find that there was an insufficiently waived conflict which would “illegalize” the Agreement until three weeks after the document was consummated. (Opn. at p. 17.) Not even fraudulent inducement destroys arbitrability, and it would overturn the expectations of sophisticated commercial actors everywhere if findings of post hoc ethical conflicts could render arbitration provisions void ab initio.

Under section 1598 of the Civil Code, it is only “Where a contract has but a single object, and such object is unlawful” that “the entire contract is void.” (Civ. Code § 1598.) As is true of lawyer-client engagement agreements in general, this Agreement had the unquestionably lawful—and common—primary objective of setting the terms and conditions under which Sheppard Mullin would provide legal services to J-M for the lawful defense of the qui tam matter and any other matters on which J-M might hire Sheppard Mullin. The informed consent/conflict waiver portion of the Agreement—the only clause attacked by J-M—had a lawful objective as well: compliance with RPC 3-310, with the arbitrators having found that Sheppard Mullin acted “honestly and in good faith” at all times. The arbitrators manifestly did not find that either J-M or Sheppard Mullin was pursuing an illegal objective in any sense.

Even if this Court were to conclude that a legally sophisticated client that was independently represented by counsel could not have understood the plain meaning of Sheppard Mullin’s informed consent/conflicts waiver language (and it should not), the absolute worst that could then be said is that Sheppard Mullin’s effort to obtain informed consent only failed because Sheppard Mullin did not expressly call attention to a then-inactive relationship with South Tahoe that Sheppard Mullin reasonably believed was subject to its own effective conflicts waivers.<sup>1</sup> As noted by the Ninth Circuit

<sup>1</sup> In fact, and as is not infrequently true, Sheppard Mullin’s resumption of work for South Tahoe was only one of a series of events that led to J-M’s attempt to invalidate its agreement with Sheppard Mullin. In addition, South Tahoe filed a motion to disqualify; South Tahoe then rejected Sheppard Mullin’s offer to pay more than the value of South Tahoe’s claim in order to eliminate any claimed conflict; J-M then rejected the option presented to it by the federal court and Sheppard Mullin that the South Tahoe claim be severed and handled by separate counsel at Sheppard Mullin’s expense; and the federal court then decided to order disqualification in what it considered a close case without clear precedent. And because J-M seeks to rely upon the alleged statement by two Sheppard Mullin lawyers that they told J-M that there were “no conflicts,” the Amici Law Firms also wish to note that it is accepted usage for lawyers, and courts, to use the words “no conflicts” when they mean “no unwaived conflicts.” (See, e.g., Richardson v. Defazio (N.J.Super.Ct.App.Div. 2016) 2016 WL 854520 at *2 [Not Reported in A.3d] [“BE also contends there is no conflict in the firm representing in another context, “The very fact that the public policy regarding fee collection by unethical lawyers is so fact-specific suggests that it is not sufficiently ‘well defined and dominant’ to fall within the public policy exception.” (Arizona Elec. Power Co-op, Inc. v. Berkeley (9th Cir. 1995) 59 F.3d 988, 992.)

J-M concedes that there are RPC violations including those for unconscionable fees and lawyer fraud, that may be arbitrated. (J-M Answer Brief at 17.) These violations can strike at the duty of loyalty just as much—indeed more so—than a purported failure to obtain fully informed consent. In other words, the dividing line that J-M presents to this Court does not exist. Worse still, any attempt to draw such a line would seriously burden clients and lawyers who would have to wait for the seriatim development of case law on whether arbitration can be halted, as well as wait for a court determination of where the particular factual circumstances in which they find themselves would fit into the case law.

The destruction of arbitration as an agreed-upon and certain remedy would be accompanied by delay and increased expense for clients as well as lawyers. When a dispute is removed from arbitration to a court, the court needs to allow discovery, request briefs, hold a hearing and issue a reasoned decision. In at least many instances, the court would conclude that arbitration could proceed as to some or all issues, with the result that the parties would then have to start over in a second forum. Multiple, collateral litigation would be the new order, striking at the core of the State’s public policy favoring the efficiency (and lower judicial burden) associated with arbitration.

defendants and IMG because all of the defendants have consented to BE’s joint representations.”].)

The arbitrators in this case did exactly what a court would have been called on to do—weigh the facts and the full range of equities to determine whether, under these particular circumstances, the remedy of fee forfeiture or disgorgement was appropriate. If J-M’s position were to be accepted, a client could conceivably await the result of an arbitration and then, if the result is unpalatable, seek to relitigate de novo what the arbitrators had already decided by claiming “illegality.” This is not a permissible ground for reversal of a decision in arbitration, and it should not be a ground for avoiding arbitration in the first instance. “Absent an express and unambiguous limitation in the contract or the submission to arbitration, an arbitrator has the authority to find the facts, interpret the contract, and award any relief rationally related to his or her factual findings and contractual interpretation.” (Gueyffier v. Ann Summers, Ltd. (2008) 43 Cal.4th 1179, 1182 [77 Cal.Rptr.3d 613, 184 P.3d 739].)<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> As mentioned, the experience of the Amici Law Firms includes numerous instances in which it is the clients who insist on the arbitration of all disputes with their lawyers, contradicting any claim that the obligation of this Court to protect the public and promote confidence in the legal profession requires particular skepticism toward the arbitration of disputes involving lawyers. For example, one major client with far-flung operations in this country and abroad mandates in its outside counsel guidelines that: “Any dispute or controversy arising under or in connection with this [engagement agreement] shall be settled by arbitration before a panel of three (3) arbitrators in accordance with the commercial arbitration rules of the American Arbitration Association then in effect. Judgment may be entered on the arbitral award in any court having jurisdiction. Each party will be responsible for selecting one (1) arbitrator, and then the two (2) selected arbitrators shall jointly select the third arbitrator to be a member of the arbitration panel. The place of arbitration shall be chosen by the Company. The arbitral award shall be final and binding.”

III. Disclosure for Informed Consent Must Focus on the Client's Reasonable Understanding, Not Perfection.

A. When It Comes to Informed Consent, Reasonable Disclosure and Understanding Is the Only Viable or Appropriate Test.

The Amici Law Firms welcome the opportunity to bring their practical experience to bear on the discussion of the quality and quantity of disclosure and informed consent necessary to make conflict waivers enforceable.

The Amici Law Firms and countless other lawyers seek consents to present and future conflicts in order to serve, not harm, their clients. The development and use of such written waivers was part of a necessary response to the broad duty of undivided loyalty as it began to develop in relatively recent decades.<sup>3</sup> Such waivers allow clients to opt out of the full duty of undivided loyalty when they determine it is in their interest to do so.<sup>4</sup>

The criteria adopted for disclosure and informed consent by the court of appeal would also disadvantage California lawyers vis-a-vis non-

<sup>3</sup> See, e.g., Bussel, No Conflict (2012) 25 Geo. J. Legal Ethics 207, 217-18 (“Not until 1982 in [ABA] Informal Opinion 1495 did the ABA explicitly interpret DR 5-105 to bar concurrent representation of clients adverse in unrelated matters.”).

<sup>4</sup> In the collective experience of the Amici Law Firms, many clients have adopted written policies governing the use of present and future conflicts waivers. (See, e.g., Kobak, Dealing with Conflicts and Disqualification Risks Professionally (2015) 44 Hofstra L.Rev. 497, 529-530 [noting practice of clients drafting engagement letters with conflict terms]; Whelan and Ziv, Privatizing Professionalism: Client Control of Lawyers' Ethics (May 2012) 80 Fordham L.Rev. 2577, 2588 & fn. 60 [noting use of outside counsel guidelines covering conflicts of interest].) The Amici Law Firms also have experience with many corporate counsel organizations that offer myriad forms for conflict waivers and arbitration provisions.

California lawyers and firms in other states and countries without such limits.<sup>5</sup> In Howard v. Babcock (1993) 6 Cal.4th 409, 421, 423 [25 Cal.Rptr.2d 80, 863 P.2d 150], this Court noted the need to keep abreast of “sweeping changes in the practice of law” and asserted that “the contemporary changes in the legal profession to which we have already alluded make the assertion that the practice of law is not comparable to a business unpersuasive and unreflective of reality.” Here, “[p]utting aside lofty assertions about the uniqueness of the legal profession” (id. at 422-23), experience shows that both clients and lawyers need to be able to execute, and then rely upon, conflicts waivers in California as they are elsewhere.

Although it may be tempting to default to a one-size-fits-all approach, the fact is that many clients are sophisticated business entities supported by other counsel, are bargaining heavyweights in the purchase of legal services, and neither want nor accept extended conflict waiver letters that exhaustively catalog all potentially relevant details. In Maxwell v. Superior Court (1982) 30 Cal.3d 606, 622 [180 Cal.Rptr. 177, 639 P.2d 248] (Maxwell), disapproved on other grounds in People v. Doolin (2009) 45 Cal.4th 390 [87 Cal.Rptr.3d 209, 198 P.3d 11], this Court cautioned that the “[w]aiver of the consequences of potential conflicts was not inadequate simply because neither the court nor the agreement undertook the impossible burden of explaining separately every conceivable ramification.” The leading practical treatise in the State describes “reasonably foreseeable consequences” as requiring that the attorney:

[E]xplain, in terms the client can reasonably understand, how the problem might affect the client or the attorney’s representation. It is not necessary, however, to disclose and explain every possible consequence of a potential or actual conflict for a consent to be valid.

<sup>5</sup> See also RPC, rule 1-100(D) (requiring California attorneys to obey the California RPCs unless the RPCs of another jurisdiction require a different result).

(Vapnek et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility (The Rutter Group 2016 Update) ¶ 4:10.)

If informed consent can be based on a waiver of a current conflict without a need to meet an unrealistic burden of explaining every conceivable ramification, the same must be true for informed consent to future conflicts. The Amici Law Firms respectfully submit that the test suggested in these authorities—reasonableness of disclosure in light of the client’s level of comprehension and access to information—is the only proper test. The experience of the Amici Law Firms also informs us that client who consent to present and future conflicts waivers believe it is in their interest to do so in order keep their lawyers of choice on their matters of choice. There should be strict limits on judicial “discretion to intrude on defendant's choice of counsel in order to eliminate potential conflicts, ensure adequate representation, or serve judicial convenience.” (Maxwell, supra, 30 Cal.3d at 613.)

The authorities relied on by Sheppard Mullin to defend the prospective waiver signed by J-M express this policy, and this case of first impression should be informed by their logic. This Court refers to the ABA Model Rules in aid of its interpretation of the RPCs, eschewing the brand of California isolationism advocated by J-M. (City & County of San Francisco v. Cobra Solutions, Inc. (2006) 38 Cal.4th 839, 852 [43 Cal.Rptr.3d 771, 135 P.3d 20] (Corba Solutions).) In Sharp v. Next Entertainment, Inc. (2008) 163 Cal.App.4th 410, 429, 433 [78 Cal.Rptr.3d 37] (Sharp), the court of appeal cites Cobra Solutions for support in looking to the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct, including the definition of informed consent contained in ABA Model Rule 1.0(e), which provides that:

“Informed consent” denotes the agreement by a person to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated adequate information and explanation about the material risks of and reasonably available alternatives to the proposed course of conduct.

The test of disclosure is adequacy or sufficiency, not length. As explained by the Official Comment [6] to ABA Model Rule 1.0:

The communication necessary to obtain such consent will vary according to the Rule involved and the circumstances giving rise to the need to obtain informed consent. The lawyer must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the client or other person possesses information reasonably adequate to make an informed decision. . . . A lawyer need not inform a client or other person of facts or implications already known to the client or other person; nevertheless, a lawyer who does not personally inform the client or other person assumes the risk that the client or other person is inadequately informed and the consent is invalid. In determining whether the information and explanation provided are reasonably adequate, relevant factors include whether the client or other person is experienced in legal matters generally and in making decisions of the type involved, and whether the client or other person is independently represented by other counsel in giving the consent. Normally, such persons need less information and explanation than others, and generally a client or other person who is independently represented by other counsel in giving the consent should be assumed to have given informed consent.

Official Comment [6] thus makes clear that disclosure does not fall short if the client reasonably understands what is at issue—regardless of the source of the understanding—and that when the client has other counsel review the disclosure, the client “should be assumed to have given informed consent.” This is consistent with Ferguson v. Yaspan (2014) 233 Cal.App.4th 676, 680-81 [183 Cal.Rptr.3d 83], which held that the presence of independent counsel is highly pertinent to questions of fairness and the sufficiency of disclosure in the context of Probate Code section 16004.

As Sheppard Mullin has pointed out, the Official Comment [22] to ABA Model Rule 1.7 provides that “if [a] client is an experienced user of the legal services and is reasonably informed regarding the risk that a conflict may arise,” an advance conflict waiver “is more likely to be effective, particularly if, e.g., the client is independently represented by other counsel in giving consent and the consent is limited to future conflicts unrelated to the subject of the representation.” This is the critical wording now contained in the draft Comment [22] proposed for our State; as shown by the cases cited above, this prescription aligns perfectly with existing law.

California courts have likewise cited with approval the definition of informed consent in the Restatement (Third) of The Law Governing Lawyers. (Sharp, supra, 163 Cal.App.4th at 429 [“Informed consent requires that the client or former client have reasonably adequate information about the material risks of such representation to that client or former client.”] [citing Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers (2000) § 122(1)] [emphasis added].) Restatement Comment c(i) explains:

The client must be aware of information reasonably adequate to make an informed decision. . . . A lawyer who does not personally inform the client assumes the risk that the client is inadequately informed and that the consent is invalid. . . . The requirements of this Section are satisfied if the client already knows the necessary information or learns it from other sources. A client independently represented—for example by inside legal counsel or by other outside counsel—will need less information about the consequences of a conflict but nevertheless may have need of information adequate to reveal its scope and severity.

(Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers, § 122, com. c(i).) The Restatement’s test, as that of other authorities, is whether the client has enough information from all available sources, including other counsel, to be reasonably able to assess the consequences of what the client is being asked to waive. (Accord, Hazard, Jr. et al., The Law of Lawyering (4th Ed. 2015) §12.34 [“Less sophisticated or less knowledgeable clients will require not only more disclosure, but also disclosure that is tailored to their apparent level of sophistication”], §12.35 [“[R]eview by independent counsel . . . will drastically reduce the risk that a conflicts waiver will not be upheld”].)

Based on their extensive experience, the Amici Law Firms submit that there are generally no more than five factors to be considered when evaluating present or future unrelated matter conflicts consents or waivers. First is the question posed in Flatt v. Superior Court (1994) 9 Cal.4th 275, 284 [36 Cal.Rptr.2d 537, 885 P.2d 950] (Flatt), whether respect has been paid to the “primary value at stake in cases of simultaneous or dual representation” in otherwise unrelated matters, which is “the attorney’s duty—and the client’s legitimate expectation—of loyalty, rather than confidentiality” (italics in original). In other words, the client must be adequately informed by the lawyer that the lawyer or her law firm as a whole (because, due inter alia to specialization, waivers of the duty of loyalty often involve matters being handled by different lawyers) will not have undivided loyalty to that client but may adversely represent others in factually and legally unrelated matters.

The second factor, as mentioned in Flatt (and the Restatement<sup>6</sup>), is the potential effect on confidential client information. If a conflict creates a risk that a client’s confidential information would be improperly used or disclosed, a client has the right to expect that to be disclosed, and procedures such as ethical walls will be implemented to mitigate any risk.

<sup>6</sup> See, e.g., Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers, §121, com. b (“The prohibition against lawyer conflicts of interest is intended to assure clients that a lawyer’s work will be characterized by loyalty, vigor and confidentiality” and informed clients have the right to elect “less than the full measure of protection that the law otherwise provides. For example, . . . a client might consent to a conflict where that is necessary to obtain the services of a particular law firm.”).

The third factor is whether there has been disclosure of the extent of the potential client group covered by the consent or waiver—for example, whether it is limited to specific clients or is open-ended.

The fourth factor is whether there has been disclosure of the types of work that the lawyer seeks to undertake—for example, whether a waiver is sought only for transactional work or also for litigation work and, if the latter, whether only some kinds of litigation are permissible while others are not.

The fifth factor is the sufficiency of the lawyer's explication of the potential effect on a client if the lawyer is unable to continue.<sup>7</sup>

The Amici Law Firms need not dispute that truly extreme situations may require greater disclosure. The Amici Law Firms submit, however, that it makes no sense for the extent of required disclosure in more or less typical situations to be based on what might be thought necessary in truly extreme situations. The overwhelming majority of conflicts waiver situations addressed by the Amici Law Firms and other counsel who use conflicts waivers, like the situation from which the current case arises, do not involve these kinds of extreme circumstances.

In the context of this case, for example, J-M—a sophisticated client with sophisticated in-house counsel—has not asserted that it failed to understand what Sheppard Mullin asked to be able to do. This is consistent with the everyday experience of the Amici Law Firms as well: given reasonable disclosure, sophisticated clients comprehend the extent of the situations in which requested waivers will apply. Lawyers do not go about

<sup>7</sup> These same factors emerge, albeit in somewhat different settings, in the context of the joint representation of a number of clients in a single matter. For example, multiple plaintiffs, multiple defendants or multiple would-be incorporators must be or become informed about the effects that sharing a lawyer may have on individual client confidentiality and on the ability of the lawyer to advocate for what is in the interests of less than all of the clients. (See generally, Hazard, Jr. et al., supra, at §§12.34-12.36.)
