Appeal from the Sacramento County Superior Court
Honorable Marjorie Koller, Judge

APPELLANT’S OPENING BRIEF ON THE MERITS

After Decision by the Court of Appeal
Third Appellate District, Appeal No. C071065
Filed March 26, 2013

ISSUE BEFORE THE COURT ON GRANT OF REVIEW

On June 26, 2013, this Court granted review of the following issue:

“Is evidence of a collaborative or organizational nexus required before multiple subsets of the Norteños can be treated as a whole for the purpose of determining whether a group constitutes a criminal street gang within the meaning of Penal Code^[1] section 186.22, subdivision (f)?”

INTRODUCTION

This Court once again faces the task of analyzing the “thicket of statutory construction issues presented by the California Street Terrorism Enforcement and Prevention Act of 1988” (STEP Act). (People v. Sengpadychith (2001) 26 Cal.4th 316, 319; (Stats. 1988, ch. 1242, § 1, pp. 4127-4129.) This case is about applying the STEP Act’s definition of “criminal street gang” to the realities of the Norteños gang and Norteños subset gangs. The Norteños gang is large, now nationwide, and has multiple subsets. Members of those Norteños subsets routinely identify themselves by expressly claiming allegiance to the smaller subset. For example, appellant claimed the Detroit Boulevard Norteños. There was evidence presented about six different Norteños subsets. Each subset in this case had a name that included the word Norteños, e.g., the Varrío Diamonds Norteños.

Members of subset gangs may, or may not, share ideologies, bylaws, organization, or joint operations. There was no evidence in this case of shared ideology, association, planning, cooperation, or the like. Instead, the evidence involved general information about the larger Norteños gang, and separate, unrelated information about six different Norteños subsets. There was rivalry among the Norteños subsets, including rivalry so severe that members of one Norteños subset killed a member of a different Norteños subset. The commonality among the Norteños subsets was limited to including “Norteños” as part of each subset’s full name, some use of the color red, and an animosity toward Sureños gang members.

Existing authorities discussing gang subsets need clarification from this Court to ensure due process concerns of adequate notice and prevention of arbitrary enforcement are satisfied. People v. Williams (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 983, 988, did this by expressly requiring a nexus among the subsets, or between the subset and the larger gang. Williams held a shared ideology was not enough. Rather, there had to be evidence of collaborative activities or collective organizational structure among the subsets and the set. Earlier, In re Jose P. (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 458, 468, and People v. Ortega (2007) 145 Cal.App.4th 1344, 1357, affirmed by citing evidence of collaborative activities or organizational structure - - that the subsets were loyal to each other, loyal to the larger gang, followed the same bylaws, or worked together in concert to commit crimes. This is required by due process. Clarifying that this nexus is required would not unduly increase the amount, or type, of evidence the prosecution must present in a gang case. Evidence of nexus already is routinely presented in this type of case.

Such evidence was presented in Williams, In re Jose P., and Ortega (although Williams concluded the evidence was insufficient).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

An amended information filed on February 6, 2012, alleged appellant Zachery Prunty was 14 years old or older (Welf. & Inst. Code, § 707, subd. (d)(2)(B)) when he committed two violations of the Penal Code. Count 1 alleged Zachery committed attempted murder (§§ 664, 187, subd. (a)), personally used a firearm, and caused great bodily injury (§ 12022.53, subds. (b), (c), (d)). Count 2 alleged Zachery committed an assault with a firearm, personally used a firearm, and inflicted great bodily harm. (§§ 245, subd. (a)(2), 12022.7, subd. (a).) (1CT 81-82.) The amended information also alleged Zachery committed each offense to benefit the Norteños² criminal street gang. (§ 186.22, subd. (b)(1).) (1CT 81-82.)

Trial commenced on February 6, 2012, and trial testimony began on February 8, 2012. (1RT 33; 1CT 5.) On February 16, 2012, a jury found Zachery not guilty of attempted murder, but guilty of the lesser included offense of attempted voluntary manslaughter; guilty of assault with a firearm; and all enhancement allegations true. (1CT 244-251.)

² For continuity, appellant refers to the Norteños gang and its subsets in the plural throughout.

On April 13, 2012, the trial court sentenced Zachery on count 1 to three years, plus two 10-year enhancements for the gang and firearm allegations; and on count 2, to a consecutive one year term, plus enhancements of three years and four months each for the personal injury and gang allegations. The total sentence was 30 years and eight months. (2RT 414-415; 2CT 309.) The court imposed restitution fines of $3,000 (§ 1202.4), a stayed a $3,000 parole revocation fine (§ 1202.45), an $80 court operations assessment (§ 1465.8), and a facility fee of $60. (2RT 416; 2CT 310.) The court awarded appellant 494 days of actual time credits and conduct time of 74 days for a total of 568 days. (2RT 415; 2CT 310.)

Appellant timely filed a notice of appeal on May 2, 2012. (2CT 311.) On March 26, 2013, the Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, affirmed the judgment. On April 26, 2013, Zachery petitioned for review to exhaust state remedies. On June 26, 2013, this Court granted review.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. EVIDENCE OF ATTEMPTED VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER AND ASSAULT WITH A FIREARM.

On November 25, 2010, Zachery was the target of a shooting. The following day, Zachery armed himself with a .38 caliber revolver. (1CT 127.) Zachery and his friend Emilio Chacon saw Gustavo Manzo, Ivonne Aguilar, and Ivonne's younger brothers Santiago and Armando walk toward the entrance of a Panda Express restaurant in Sacramento. (1RT 35-36, 54-55, 73, 96, 154.) Zachery and Emilio had been drinking cheap brandy earlier in the evening. (1CT 173.)

Zachery saw Manzo, who wore a Los Angeles cap and black clothing consistent with the Sureños gang. (1RT 154.) Zachery, who admitted membership in the Detroit Boulevard Norteños, a subset of the Norteños gang (1CT 141), called Manzo a “skrap.” Zachery asked Manzo where he was from. (1RT 43, 60-61, 98, 110; 1CT 165-167.) “Skrap” was a derogatory term for a Sureño gang member. (1RT 109.) Manzo responded by calling Zachery a “buster,” a derogatory term for Norteños. Manzo told Zachery to have some respect. (1RT 66, 78, 98-99; 1CT 165-166.)

Zachery and Manzo argued. Ivonne Aguilar yelled at Zachery, calling him a “little buster.” (1RT 38-39, 58; 1CT 169.) Armando and Santiago Aguilar, realized something bad could occur, and ran toward the entrance of the restaurant. (1RT 66.) Manzo was older and larger than Zachery. (1RT 95-96, 114; 1CT 165.) Manzo was about 22 to 24 feet from Zachery. (1RT 80-81.)

Initially, there was merely an oral argument, during which Zachery and Emilio backed away from Manzo. Then Manzo called after them, “why are you backing out?” (1RT 113, 138; 1CT 167.) Both Manzo and Ivonne Aguilar continued to berate Zachery and Emilio, telling them to keep walking before they got “fucked up.” (1CT 169-171.) Manzo stepped towards Zachery, who, fearing an attack, fired his gun. (1RT 68, 80.) One shot hit Manzo in the lower buttock. (1RT 101-102.) Santiago Aguilar ducked behind a rock, but was hit in the leg with a second bullet. (1RT 40.)

After the shooting, the police searched Zachery’s residence. Police found a gun under his mattress. (1RT 159.) The police questioned Zachery in a recorded interview that was played to the jury. (1RT 202; 1CT 117-187.) Zachery admitted membership in the Detroit Boulevard Norteños gang, and that he had carried a gun on November 26, 2010. (1CT 141, 145.) Zachery explained he obtained the gun because some other gangs had been shooting at them. (1CT 146.) Just the night before Zachery was fired upon during a drive-by committed by a different gang. (1CT 146-147.)

B. GANG EVIDENCE.

Detective John Sample of the Sacramento Police Department testified as the gang expert. (1RT 206 [trial court accepted Sample as expert].) The Norteños were an Hispanic criminal street gang active in Sacramento and throughout California. (1RT 209.) There were about 1,500 local members. (1RT 209.) There were many subsets of Norteños based on different neighborhoods. Members claimed different neighborhoods. (1RT 209.) The Norteños did not claim a specific area of Sacramento. Instead, the Norteños gang was dispersed throughout Sacramento, from north to south, depending on the particular subsets of Norteños. (1RT 209.) The Sureños, another Hispanic criminal street gang, were the primary rival enemies of the Norteños. (1RT 210, 234.)

The current Hispanic criminal street gangs originated in the California prison system in the late 1960's and early 1970's. (1RT 234.) Back then, the Mexican Mafia was one of the strongest prison gangs, and it victimized Mexican prisoners who were not part of the gang. (2RT 234.) Non-Mexican Mafia prisoners formed their own gang, known as Nuestra Familia. (1RT 235.) The Mexican Mafia, or Sureños, used the color blue, and associated with the number 13 because "m" was the thirteenth letter of the alphabet. (2RT 235.) Nuestra Familia, or Norteños, used the color red, and associated with the number 14 because "n" was the fourteenth letter of the alphabet. (2RT 235.) Over time, the rivalry between the two Hispanic prison gangs extended beyond the prison system. (2T 235.) The dividing line between the Sureños and Norteños was geographic, approximately located at Bakersfield. (1RT 235.)

Sample interviewed Zachery in connection with the charged offenses. The interview was recorded, and the recording was played for the jury. (1RT 202; Exhibit 19.) Zachery claimed the Detroit Boulevard Norteños. (1RT 208; 1CT 141.) Sample considered items seized from Zachery's home, including a manila envelope. (1RT 217; Exhibit 7.) The envelope had Jordan Lujan's name on them, and did not bear Zachery's name. (1RT 237-237.) The envelope contained red writing, including "7600 DTB," "DB," "Norte," "fuck a Skrap," "D Bully," and "XIV." (1RT 217-219.) Sample concluded these were references to Detroit Boulevard Norteños, and that "skrap" was a derogatory name for Sureños that meant sewer rat or city dweller. (1RT 219-220.) Zachery had cloth belts with the letters "D" and "N," which Sample concluded stood for Detroit and Norte, or Norteño, respectively. (1RT 220; Exhibit 5A, 5C.)

Sample opined Zachery was a Norteños gang member. (1RT 216, 222-223.) Of 11 criteria used by local law enforcement to validate gang membership, Zachery met six of the criteria. (1RT 215-216.) Sample's opinion was based on Zachery's admission, his actions in the current offenses, possession of Norteños graffiti, his clothing and hairstyle, law enforcement reports validating Zachery as a member, and his prior contacts with law enforcement. (1RT 222-225.)

Sample opined that Emilio Chacon was a Norteños gang member. (1RT 225-226.) He also concluded Manzo was probably a Sureños member even though Manzo never admitted gang membership. (1RT 225-228.) Sample opined a shooting under the facts and circumstances of the charged shooting was gang related. (1RT 231-232.)

ARGUMENT

I

EVIDENCE OF A COLLABORATIVE OR ORGANIZATIONAL NEXUS IS REQUIRED BEFORE MULTIPLE SUBSETS OF THE NORTEÑOS CAN BE TREATED AS A WHOLE FOR THE PURPOSE OF DETERMINING WHETHER A GROUP CONSTITUTES A CRIMINAL STREET GANG WITHIN THE MEANING OF PENAL CODE SECTION 186.22, SUBDIVISION (F), OTHERWISE A VIOLATION OF STATE AND FEDERAL DUE PROCESS RESULTS.

A. OVERVIEW OF ARGUMENT.

The jury found Zachery committed the offenses for the benefit of a criminal street gang under section 186.22, subdivision (b)(1). That subdivision sets forth two prongs. The first relates to the nature of the crime, requiring that its commission be for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with a criminal street gang. The second prong relates to the defendant's state of mind, and requires the defendant have the specific intent to promote, further, or assist in criminal conduct by the gang.

(People v. Albillar (2010) 51 Cal.4th 47, 64-65; People v. Gardeley (1996) 14 Cal.4th 605, 623.) The prosecution presented evidence about the Norteños gang and six Norteños subsets. There was no substantial evidence connecting the various Norteños subsets in any way except by name - - either to each other, or to the larger gang. Therefore, the finding that Zachery committed the offenses for the benefit of, at the direction of, or in association with any criminal street gang” is not supported by substantial evidence that meets the due process requirements of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments. (Jackson v. Virginia (1979) 443 U.S. 307, 313-314 [99 S.Ct. 2781, 61 L.Ed.2d 560].)

Section 186.22, subdivision (f) defines four requisite components for a “criminal street gang:” (1) “any ongoing organization, association, or group of three or more persons, whether formal or informal;” (2) “having as one of its primary activities the commission of one or more of the criminal [offenses identified in] subdivision (e);” (3) “having a common name or common identifying sign or symbol;” and (4) “whose members individually or collectively engage in or have engaged in a pattern of criminal gang activity.”

This Court’s task of analyzing the “thicket of statutory construction issues” in section 186.22 is complicated by the absence of any definition in the STEP Act of gang membership even though there is a general definition of “criminal street gang.” (See People v. Sengpadychith, supra, 26 Cal.4th at p. 319.) Law enforcement agencies and the courts were left to, and did, identify factors that inform the question of membership. People v. Green (1991) 227 Cal.App.3d 692, concluded “member” and “membership” were “terms of ordinary meaning and required no further definition.” (Id. at p. 699, overruled on other grounds in People v. Castenada (2000) 23 Cal.4th 743, 752.) As a result, there can be a broad application of the concept of membership, along with the broad application of the concept of a criminal street gang, such as the one the Court of Appeal below embraced.

This Court’s task also is complicated by the STEP Act’s expansion to cover more offenses, more groups, and more people. For example, when the STEP Act was first enacted, the offenses that could constitute a “pattern of criminal gang activity” numbered only seven. The intent was to make STEP Act prosecutions “very difficult to prove except in the most egregious cases.” (Cal. Senate Comm. on Judiciary Bill Analysis: AB 2013, Record No. 29069, 1987-1988 Reg. Sess. (1988) at 4.) The number of pattern gang offenses today has more than quadrupled. Section 186.22, subdivision (e), now contains 33 offenses.

The Court's task is further complicated by the STEP Act's disproportionate application to young males, who are typically Hispanic or Black, and who are typically from low income neighborhoods. The youths spend time in their neighborhoods, which often have high density gang activity, and with their families and friends, who may associate culturally with a particular gang. This was the situation in the instant case: 14-year old Zachery Prunty's companion Emilio Chacon followed his family's generational association with the Norteños. Emilio claimed the Franklin Boulevard Norteños subset. His mother bore Norteños tattoos, had prior association with the Norteños, and the Chacon home prominently displayed a photograph of Norteños gang members.

The prosecution presented evidence of six Norteños criminal street gang subsets. There was no evidence presented that explained a gang subset. In common parlance, "subset" is defined as "a set each of whose elements is an element of an inclusive set," or "division, portion." (<http://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/subset>.) The Merriam-Webster dictionary provides the following examples for the use of the word "subset:" "The set {1,2,3} is a subset of the set {1,2,3,4,5}," and, "Only a small subset of the patients in the study experienced these side effects." Both examples demonstrate that a set is both larger, and different from, any subset. In the dictionary example the first set contains 4 and 5; whereas the subset 1, 2, and 3, does not. What this set and subset have in common is limited only to the numbers 1, 2, and 3. The numbers 4 and 5 are not connected to the subset, and do not define the subset. The second set consists of patients who participated in a study. Within that set, there is a subset of patients who did not experience side effects, and another, smaller subset of patients who had side effects. What the patients in the set have in common is participation in the study, but patients with side effects did not share the results of patients without side effects. Thus, subsets by their nature and definition are different from the larger set, and other subsets of the larger set.

The Norteños gang has multiple subsets, some of which are in constant rivalry with one another. Thus, the mere fact the full gang name of a subset may contain the word “Norteños” does not make the gangs one in the same, or even connected to one another. In an injunction case against Sureños, Justice Chin wrote, “the Sureño street gangs at issue in this case have fluid membership, no organizational structure, and no express purpose except perhaps to compete with members of rival Norteño gangs. The fact that many Sureño gang members commit crimes . . . does not establish that the gangs have crime as a universal purpose, primary activity, or condition of membership. The Sureño gangs might have some subdivisions that are criminally inclined and others that are not. Obviously, courts cannot enjoin all Mexican-Americans because some Mexican-Americans contribute to the nuisance” (People v. ex rel. Gallo v. Acuna (1997) 14 Cal.4th 1090, 1130 (conc. & dis. opn. of Chin, J.)) The same is true here. The joint use of the name Norteños, and a shared rivalry with Sureños, does not make all Norteños subsets a whole for purposes of section 186.22, subdivision (f).

This Court should interpret “criminal street gangs” in a way that prevents punishing all Mexican-Americans who associate with some Hispanic gang, however loosely connected to another Hispanic gang using a similar name. To this end, People v. Williams (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 983, 988, got it right by requiring a showing of shared, collaborative activities, or collective organizational structure among subset gangs. These subsets, by their own terms, define themselves as different gangs from one another. They do this typically by claiming a distinct neighborhood. The Williams court did what courts are supposed to do: scrutinize and interpret statutes to ensure they meet constitutional requirements. (People v. Castenada, supra, 23 Cal.4th at pp. 747-748 [whether the STEP Act met federal due process]; Delaney v. Superior Court (Kopetman) (1990) 50 Cal.3d 785, 805-806 [whether “reporters shield act” met federal constitutional right to fair trial].)

This is the correct approach, and avoids due process problems of either a lack of notice, or arbitrary enforcement. (Kolender v. Lawson (1983) 461 U.S. 352, 358 [103 S.Ct. 1855, 75 L.Ed.2d 903] [explaining void-for-vagueness doctrine requires penal statute to define the criminal offense so that (1) ordinary people can understand what conduct is prohibited, and (2) in a way that does not encourage arbitrary/discriminatory enforcement].)

People v. Williams, supra, 167 Cal.App.4th 983, correctly required that sufficient evidence of these four elements must be “something more than a shared ideology or philosophy, or a name.” (Id. at p. 988.) Substantial evidence under Williams required, “some sort of collaborative activities or collective organizational structure . . .” (Ibid.) What Williams required is no more than the statute itself. There must be a connection between the first two elements and the fourth element of section 186.22 subdivision (f). The “ongoing . . . group,” with a “primary purpose” of committing crimes, must be the same group “whose members engage in . . . a pattern of criminal gang activity.” (See also People v. Sengpadychith, supra, 26 Cal.4th at pp. 323-324, discussed post.) To interpret subdivision (f) otherwise would violate due process, and remove “personal guilt” altogether. (See People v. Castenada (2000) 23 Cal.4th 743, 748, discussing Scales v. United States (1961) 367 U.S. 203, 224-225 [81 S.Ct. 146, 96 L.Ed.2d 782] [“In our jurisprudence guilt is personal, and when the imposition of punishment on a status or on conduct can only be justified by reference to the relationship of that status or conduct to other concededly criminal activity . . . , that relationship must be sufficiently substantial to satisfy the concept of personal guilt in order to withstand attack under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment.”].)

B. COURTS OF APPEAL’S DECISIONS ON CRIMINAL STREET GANG SUBSETS PREVIOUSLY HELD EXPLICITLY, OR IMPLICITLY, THAT A NEXUS BETWEEN SUBSET GANGS AND THE LARGER GANG MUST BE DEMONSTRATED BEFORE THE GANGS ARE DEEMED A SINGLE GANG FOR PURPOSES OF THE STEP ACT.

The Fifth and Third Appellate Districts have issued published decisions addressing the application of section 186.22 to criminal street gang subsets. The Fifth Appellate District expressly required a nexus between a subset gang and the larger gang. The Third Appellate District’s opinions implicitly required a nexus by relying on evidence showing a nexus to affirm against insufficiency of evidence challenges. These published opinions, in Williams, In re Jose P., and Ortega, did not go far enough in clearly articulating the nexus required between subsets and sets.

Further, the holding in the previously published³ decision by the Third Appellate District in Zachery's case departed from these earlier decisions, and cannot be reconciled. Appellant will discuss each.

1. PEOPLE V. WILLIAMS (2008) 167 CAL.APP.4TH 983.

People v. Williams, supra, 167 Cal.App.4th 983, considered a situation similar to the instant case. At issue in Williams was the larger Peckerwoods gang, and a subset known as the Small Town Peckerwoods. The defendant conceded he was a member of the Small Town Peckerwoods gang. At trial, the gang expert opined the Small Town Peckerwoods were a subset of the larger Peckerwoods gang. (Id. at pp. 987-988.) The expert testified the Small Town Peckerwoods and the Peckerwoods shared the same ideology. Both believed in white pride or white supremacist ideology. (Id. at p. 988.) Both groups responded to “shot-callers” who received orders from a higher authority in prison. (Ibid.) The defendant had a “Peckerwood” tattoo. (Ibid.) His former co-defendant identified himself to law enforcement as a “Peckerwood,” and had a poem entitled “Peckerwood Soldiers” discussing Peckerwoods in prison. (Ibid.) The gang expert also testified:

³ The decision was previously published as People v. Prunty (2013) 214 Cal.App.4th 1110, and depublished by this Court's grant of review.

Peckerwoods are not typically organized like other criminal street gangs, however; for the most part, they have no constitution, and are a looser organization with a less well-defined rank structure. Peckerwood groups get together more for bragging than for strategizing, and one group of Peckerwoods will not necessarily know what another group is doing.

(Ibid.)

Thus, in Williams, unlike appellant's case, there was evidence of shared ideology and belief in white supremacist ideology, and evidence that both the set and the subset received and followed orders from a higher authority in prison. There was no equivalent evidence in appellant's case about the Norteños and the Norteños subsets. Even so, in Williams, the Fifth District Court of Appeal concluded the evidence was insufficient. The Court held, "In our view, something more than a shared ideology or philosophy, or a name that contains the same word, must be shown before multiple units can be treated as a whole when determining whether a group constitutes a criminal street gang. Instead, some sort of collaborative activities or collective organizational structure must be inferable from the evidence, so that the various groups reasonably can be viewed as parts of the same overall organization. There was no such showing here." (People v. Williams, supra, 167 Cal.App.4th at p. 988.)

2. IN RE JOSE P. (2003) 106 CAL.APP.4TH 458.

In re Jose P., supra, 106 Cal.App.4th 458, considered the challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence to show the minor defendant was associated with the Norteños. The case involved evidence about the Norteños and two Norteños subsets. The gang expert testified the Norteños street gang was an ongoing organization with around 600 members or associates in Salinas, and there were separate cliques or factions within the larger Norteños gang. (Id. at p. 463.) Those subgroups included the Santa Rita and Salinas East Market Street (SEM) gangs. (Ibid.) The expert testified Santa Rita and SEM “were loyal to each other and to the larger Norteño[s] street gang.” (Ibid.) The expert also testified that, “all Norteño[s] gangs follow the same bylaws as the Norteño[s] prison gangs.” (Ibid.) The minor in In re Jose P. also had been observed in the company of Norteños, SEM, and Santa Rita gang members. (Id. at p. 468.) The minor told law enforcement, “if his fellow gang members had asked him to do something, he would not be a chicken.” (Ibid.) The minor’s girlfriend wrote in her diary about the minor, making repeated references to the Norteños. Her family received a note from the Norteños trying to dissuade testimony against the minor. (Ibid.) The defendant in In re Jose P. had spent time with members from other Norteños subsets and the larger Norteños gang on “several occasions.” (Ibid.)

The Third District Court of Appeal concluded the evidence was sufficient to show the minor’s offense was committed for the benefit of the Norteños. While the Court of Appeal likened the gang evidence in In re Jose P. to the gang evidence presented against Zachery, there was a huge difference. In appellant’s case, there was no evidence all Norteños gangs followed the same bylaws. There was no evidence the Norteños subsets were loyal to the larger Norteños street gang.

3. PEOPLE V. ORTEGA (2007) 145 CAL.APP.4TH 1344.

In People v. Ortega, supra, 145 Cal.App.4th 1344, the Third Appellate District concluded evidence was sufficient to prove the defendant belonged to the Norteños gang even though the Norteños had numerous subsets. Ortega did not involve specific evidence of different subsets as did appellant’s case below. The evidence was that, in Sacramento, the Norteños membership was in the thousands, and there were 20 to 25 Norteños subsets operating. In Ortega, the defendant argued, “there was insufficient evidence to sustain a finding of the existence of a criminal street gang because the gang to which the prosecution’s expert testified was the Norteño gang, and the term ‘Norteño’ [wa]s merely the geographical identity of a number of local gangs with similar characteristics, but [wa]s not itself an entity.” (Id. at p. 1355.) The Third District Court of Appeal rejected the argument. The Court of Appeal concluded the prosecution’s gang expert testimony showed there were thousands of documented Norteño gang members in Sacramento, and 20 to 25 Norteños subsets. (Id. at p. 1356.) The evidence showed Norteños had commonly used symbols (e.g., the letter “N,” Roman numeral IV, “catorce” (Spanish for 14), and the color red). (Ibid.) Some of the Norteños’ primary activities included murder, assault, witness intimidation, car-jacking, robbery, extortion, and dope dealing. Two predicate offenses⁴ had been committed by Norteños.

The Ortega opinion rejected the “defendant’s assertion that the prosecution had to prove precisely which subset was involved in the present case.” (People v. Ortega, supra, 145 Cal.App.4th at p. 1357.) There was sufficient evidence in Ortega that the Norteños, as a larger group, were a criminal street gang. (Ibid.) Further, in Ortega, unlike Zachery’s case, there was additional, critical evidence presented by the prosecution. Specifically, “there was testimony that it was not uncommon for members of different gangs to work in concert to commit a crime.” (Ibid.) No similar evidence exists in this case.

The prosecution was required to prove all elements of the gang enhancement allegation beyond a reasonable doubt. Neither the trier of fact, nor the reviewing court, can assume the goals and activities of a gang subset are shared by the other subsets, or by the set as a whole. In this regard, the Court of Appeal analyzed the question of sufficiency of the evidence incorrectly as revealed by the Court’s comment, “No evidence indicated the goals and activities of a particular subset were not shared by the others.” (People v. Ortega, supra, 145 Cal.App.4th at p. 1357.) The proper analysis was to determine whether there was substantial evidence that the 20 to 25 subsets shared goals and activities. In Ortega, the matter was a distinction without a difference in the result, because there was evidence the different gangs worked together in concert and committed crimes together. (Ibid.) In contrast, there was no evidence of shared goals or joint criminal activity in Zachery’s case.

C. EXISTING AUTHORITY FROM THE COURTS OF APPEAL REQUIRES CLARIFICATION THAT A COLLABORATIVE OR ORGANIZATIONAL NEXUS MUST BE SHOWN BEFORE SUBSETS CAN BE TREATED AS A WHOLE WITH THE LARGER GANG.

1. THERE WAS INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE OF A CRIMINAL STREET GANG UNDER PROPER APPLICATION OF EXISTING AUTHORITIES.

Preliminarily, appellant notes that the proper application of Court of Appeal authorities demonstrates there was insufficient evidence connecting any of the six Norteños subsets in this case to one another, or to the larger Norteños gang. In its previously published opinion in this case, the Third District Court of Appeal rejected appellant’s argument that the evidence was insufficient to support the gang enhancement allegation. (People v. Prunty (2013) 214 Cal.App.4th 1110.⁵) The Court of Appeal reached this outcome by committing two mistakes. First, the Court of Appeal concluded the evidence against Zachery “was remarkably similar to evidence offered for the same purpose in In re Jose P.” (Id. at p. 1115.) As demonstrated, ante, the evidence in In re Jose P. showed: (1) loyalty of all Norteños subsets to the larger Norteños group, (2) members of the different subsets and larger set spent time together, and (3) all Norteños subsets followed the same Norteños bylaws. The only similarity between this case and In re Jose P. really was that both cases considered Norteños subsets. Thus, based on the sufficiency of the evidence present in the Third Appellate District's previous opinions in In re Jose P., and Ortega, the evidence against appellant was insufficient.

Second, the Third Appellate District expressly disagreed with the Fifth Appellate District opinion in People v. Williams, supra, 167 Cal.App.4th 983, claiming Williams added "an element to the statute that the Legislature did not put there." (People v. Prunty, supra, 214 Cal.App.4th at p.1117.) Appellant disagrees. Section 186.22, subdivision (f), must be read as a whole. Subdivision (f) identifies four elements defining a "criminal street gang:" (1) "any ongoing organization, association, or group of three or more persons, whether formal or informal;" (2) "having as one of its primary activities the commission of one or more of the criminal [offenses identified in] subdivision (e); (3) "having a common name or common identifying sign or symbol;" and (4) "whose members individually or collectively engage in or have engaged in a pattern of criminal gang activity." These four element must relate to one another. Williams did nothing more, or less, than acknowledge there must be a nexus between elements one and two, and the fourth element. Absent the nexus, absurd and unconstitutional results would follow.

For example, one subset could commit the primary activities required by the second element, and another subset might not. This deficiency is not cured by purporting to transmute the legal question into a factual one.

(Contra, People v. Prunty, supra, 214 Cal.App.4th at p. 1118.) For example, a “subset” of the United States Army could be the 320th Military Police Battalion at Abu Ghraib, or Charlie Company of 1st Battalion, 20th Infantry Regiment, 11th Brigade, of the America Division at My Lai. The members of each subset engaged in a pattern of criminal activity. But that does not mean that another Army soldier from another unit altogether who commits a crime, is a member of that criminal street gang. (See also, People v. Sengpadychith, supra, 26 Cal.4th at pp. 323-324, discussed post [discussing similar analysis regarding crimes committed by police officers].)

It may be helpful to remove the analysis from the realm of criminal enterprise and focus on the organizational nexus among subsets of a larger set. Take for example members of the California State Bar. Active members in good standing share many things with one another: training, education, ideology and ethics, the requirement to pay dues and continue their legal education, etc. They receive similar publications. Still the membership is divided into subsets, many of which know little or nothing of other subsets. Some subsets are recognized as specialty areas within the general membership. To become a member at all, a prospective member must attain, and be tested on, basic proficiency in some subjects, such as, constitutional law, contracts, criminal law, or evidence, but not others, such as tax law. Thus, members with a specialty in criminal law, that is, the criminal law subset, may know nothing at all about what members practicing tax law, that is, the tax law subset, are doing. Considering the lawful group of State Bar members is helpful because the group is more organized and structured than organizations known as “criminal street gangs.” Even so, members of subsets do not necessarily have any knowledge of, or connection to, other subsets.

2. “A CRIMINAL STREET GANG” AS DEFINED BY SECTION 186.22, SUBDIVISION (F), MUST INCLUDE A COLLABORATIVE OR ORGANIZATIONAL NEXUS BEFORE MULTIPLE GANG SUBSETS CAN BE TREATED AS A WHOLE.

Lanzetta v. New Jersey (1939) 306 U.S. 451, 459 [S.Ct. 618, 83 L.Ed. 888], considered the constitutionality of a state gang statute. The statute punished persons meeting three criteria: they were without a lawful occupation; had suffered at least three convictions of disorderly conduct, or a conviction of some other crime; and they were “known to be a member of any gang consisting of two or more persons.” (Id., at p. 452.) The High Court focused on the terms “gang,” and “known to be a member of any gang,” and whether these terms were so vague so that people of ordinary intelligence necessarily had to guess as to their meaning. (Id., at p. 453.) In holding the statute unconstitutional, the court found the legislation vague as to the meaning of the term “gang,” and “member of a gang.” (Id., at p. 458.)

The STEP Act suffers from similar vagueness, but the vagueness about what constitutes a “criminal street gang” generally is cured by the requirements that the group has: (1) a common name or identifying symbol, and (2) the commission of certain enumerated crimes as a primary activity. (§ 186.22, subd. (f).) The approach fails, however, when determining if a subset qualifies merely because the larger set (which shares the same, or similar name) has the requisite primary activity. That is because “primary” means simply consistent and repeated commission of enumerated crimes.

This Court explained in People v. Sengpadychith, supra, 26 Cal.4th 316, that, “Though members of the Los Angeles Police Department may commit an enumerated offense while on duty, the commission of crime is not a primary activity of the department. Section 186.22 . . . requires that one of the primary activities of the group or association itself be the commission of [specified] crime[s] . . .’ (Id. at pp. 323-324.) Thus, to fall within section 186.22, Sengpadychith required a connection between the “ongoing . . . group,” with a “primary purpose” of committing crimes, and the group “whose members engage in . . . a pattern of criminal gang activity.” (§ 186.22, subd. (f).) However, Sengpadychith also explained, “Sufficient proof of the gang’s primary activities might consist of evidence that the group’s members consistently and repeatedly have committed criminal activity listed in the gang statute.” (Id. at p. 324 [italics in original].) As in appellant’s earlier example, such consistent and repeated criminal activity was, in fact, committed by Rampart Division LAPD officers, and Army soldiers at Abu Ghraib and My Lai. Further, bad police officers, or Army soldiers, could seek assignment to subsets of the larger group specifically for the purpose of committing offenses constituting the pattern of criminal activity of a subset. Therefore, “primary” does not insulate the subsets, which is why a collaborative or organizational nexus must be required.

At bottom, the proscribed gang purpose relates back to the personal guilt concept of Scales. People v. Castenada, supra, held the STEP Act requires even more than Scales. This Court explained, “Scales [], held that the Smith Act satisfied the due process requirement of personal guilt by requiring proof of a defendant's active membership in a subversive organization with knowledge of and an intent to further its goals." (People v. Castenada, supra, 23 Cal.4th at p. 749 [citations omitted] [emphasis added] [discussing § 186.22, subd. (a)].) A collective gang purpose among gang subsets is required before additional punishment can constitutionally be imposed for crimes purportedly committed for the benefit of a gang. In this regard, People v. Williams, supra, did not go far enough.

This Court should make clear that a nexus is required among all four elements of section 186.22, subdivision (f). The same ongoing group of three or more, must share the primary activity of committing at least one of the enumerated offenses, and the same group must share a common name or symbol, and the members of that same group must engage in a pattern of criminal gang activity.

D. FACTS AND INFORMATION ABOUT THE NORTEÑOS GANG AND NORTEÑOS SUBSETS SHOWED ONLY SEPARATE GROUPS WITH NO SHOWING OF ANY MEANINGFUL CONNECTION OR NEXUS AMONG THE SUBSETS, OR BETWEEN THE SUBSETS AND THE SET.

The gang evidence was divided into two categories: evidence about six Norteños subsets, and evidence about the Norteños generally. There was no evidence of a meaningful connection among the subsets, or a meaningful connection between the subsets and the set. There was evidence of intense rivalry among some subsets that was so violent and intense it had led to death. There was no evidence to support attributing the predicate offenses of one subset to another subset, or to consider the subsets equivalent to the set. Appellant discusses the specific evidence presented in his case to illustrate the disparate nature of the Norteños subsets, and their relationship to the Norteños set.

1. NORTEÑOS GANG HISTORY AND OVERVIEW.

The prosecution's gang expert testified the Norteños were an Hispanic criminal street gang active in Sacramento and throughout California. (1RT 209.) The Norteños originated in the California prison system in the late 1960's and early 1970's. (1RT 234.) At the time of trial, there were about 1,500 Norteños in the Sacramento area. (1RT 209.) Within Sacramento, there were many subsets of Norteños based on different geographic neighborhoods. (1RT 209.) Sample identified six different Norteños subsets in connection with Zachery's case: the Detroit Boulevard Norteños, Varrío Gardenland Norteños, Varrío Franklin Boulevard Norteños, Del Paso Heights Norteños, Varrío Centro Norteños, and Southside Park Norteños. (1RT 207, 209, 211-212, 214, 250.)

Sample did not explain if, or how, the subsets were connected to each other, or to the larger Norteños gang. There was no evidence what constituted a Norteños subset. There was no evidence any of these six different Norteños subsets collaborated together outside of the California prison system. Indeed, there was evidence that Norteños did not work together, and suffered from violent, internal rivalry among the Norteños subsets. Both of the predicate crimes introduced to show the “pattern of criminal gang activity” by the Norteños under section 186.22, subdivision (e),⁶ involved Norteños victimizing other Norteños or a former Norteños member.

Sample’s description of the Norteños gang, and its origins, was limited to California generally, and the Sacramento area specifically. In considering whether evidence of a collaborative or organizational nexus is required before multiple subsets of the Norteños can be treated as a whole, it is appropriate to consider the expanse of the Norteños, both in and out of

California. Considering the vast membership and locations of the Norteños is appropriate. The number of members, the number of subsets, and the geographic distances between them inform the question of whether subsets can be viewed as a whole. Appendix A to the 2011 National Gang Threat Assessment - Emerging Trends report⁷ prepared by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) identifies active gangs in the United States by state. The Appendix shows the Norteños operating in Indiana, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Texas, Utah, Virginia, and Washington. (FBI's 2011 National Gang Threat Assessment - Emerging Trends, Appendix A.) More recently, the United States Department of Justice shows pending prosecutions against Norteños in additional states, not mentioned in the FBI report, including Kansas and Idaho. 2. THE VARRIO CENTRO NORTEÑOS AND SOUTHSIDE PARK NORTEÑOS CONTROLLED THE GEOGRAPHIC AREA WHERE THE SHOOTING OCCURRED.

The shooting occurred in the Midtown area of 19th and R. (1RT 34-37, 53-55, 72-73, 94-96, 250.) That geographic area was within the territory of two different Norteños subsets: Varrio Centro Norteños and Southside Park Norteños. The expert was asked, “To what gang does that area sort of belong?” Sample answered, “Varrio Centro and Southside Park.” (1RT 250.) He did not answer, “the Norteños,” and he explained, “You’re talking about Norteños sets.” (1RT 250.) When asked if Varrio Centro was the same as Southside Park, Sample answered, “No.” (1RT 250.)

3. THE VARRIO DIAMONDS NORTEÑOS AND DETROIT BOULEVARD NORTEÑOS, WHICH ZACHERY CLAIMED.

Zachery claimed Detroit Boulevard. Sample’s interview with Zachery was introduced, and included the following:

DET. SAMPLE: “Are you a Northerner?”

⁹ Available at <http://www.justice.gov/usao/id/news/2011/oct/smith10182011.html>.

ZACK PRUNTY: Yeah.

DET. SAMPLE: Northerner from where?

ZACK PRUNTY: Detroit Boulevard.

DET. SAMPLE: Now is that a set down there cause I haven't heard - - or is it or do you just claim Norte?

ZACK PRUNTY: Yeah. That's my set. But everybody else from the D's is Bloods.

DET. SAMPLE: From - - they're mostly Bloods down there? That's what I heard.

ZACK PRUNTY: Yeah.

DET. SAMPLE: But so you're a Norte and you're just claiming your neighborhood?

ZACK PRUNTY: Boulevard, yeah.

DET. SAMPLE: Okay. Is there a name for your un is - - is there many people down there?

ZACK PRUNTY: What there's a lot but they're Bloods. I don't hardly know them

DET. SAMPLE: So nobody else claims Detroit Boulevard?

ZACK PRUNTY: Mm-mm. Well some other people do but not like me. They ain't putting down on me.

(ICT 140-141.)

Exhibit 23 was an overhead photograph of Zachery's residence showing the street Detroit Boulevard. (1RT 207.) When police searched Zachery's home, they found belts with the letters "D" and "N." (2RT 220; Exhibits 5A, 5C.) Sample opined the letters represented Detroit and Norteños. (1RT 221.)

Exhibit 7, a manila envelope with writing, also was seized from Zachery's residence. The name Jordan Lujan, Zachery's relative, was on the envelope. (1RT 218; Exhibit 7.) Zachery's name was not on the envelope. (1RT 237.) The envelope was found in the garage of the residence. (1RT 239-240.) Sample opined the writing on the envelope was gang graffiti. (1RT 218.) The envelope contained writing, including red writing, and "7600," "DB," and "DTB," which was the block of the residence, that is, the 7600 block of Detroit Boulevard. (1RT 217-218.) There was a hand drawn Uzi, a semiautomatic handgun. (1RT 217.)

A three-dimensional diamond was glued onto the envelope. (1RT 217.) The Varrio Diamonds Norteños were yet another Norteños subset, or active crew. (1RT 218.) "Norte" appeared on one side, as did "Fuck a Skrap," a derogatory term used by Norteños to refer to Sureños. (1RT 219.) A crossed out "S" and "C" appeared, which was disrespect to Sureños and Crips. (1RT 219-220.) "D Bully," "XIV" and "DB" appeared in red. (1RT 219.) “D Bully” was Detroit Boulevard. (1RT 220, 241.) Sample did not think Lujan had been a Norteños at the time the envelope was seized, but was by the time of trial. (1RT 238.)

On cross-examination, Sample testified he had never heard the phrase “D Bully” related to the Norteños gang. (1RT 241.) He had heard “Bully” used in other Boulevard gangs, including Norteños subset gangs. (1RT 242.) For example, he had heard of Franklin Boulevard Norteños described as Bully. (1RT 241.) The envelope also contained the notation, “one way in, one way out.” (1RT 239.) Sample thought that could mean the end of the road, because “Detroit Boulevard is one way in and one way out. So they could be talking about the neighborhood.” (1RT 239.) Sample acknowledged the information on the envelope “was not necessarily gang-related,” that it could related to the neighborhood. (1RT 242.)

4. THE FRANKLIN BOULEVARD NORTEÑOS; EMILIO CHACON’S NORTEÑOS SUBSET.

Emilio Chacon was with Zachery on the night of the shooting. The prosecutor asked Sample whether Emilio claimed the Varrío Gardenland Norteños. (1RT 209.) Sample replied in the negative, explaining that the Varrío Gardenland Norteños was another Norteños subset in the north Sacramento area. (1RT 210.) Emilio claimed the Franklin Boulevard

Norteños, in reference to the street, which ran north to south through Sacramento. (1RT 210.)

There were generational influences to Hispanic gang membership. (1RT 236.) Youths sometimes learned gang culture and affiliations based on their parents or other family members. (1RT 236.) There was evidence of a Norteños lineage at Chacon's residence. (1RT 236. Chacon's mother had gang-related tattoos. She admitted the tattoos were gang-related and that she had a prior gang association with the Norteños. (1RT 237.) The Chacon home prominently displayed a photo of Norteños gang members posing and throwing gang signs. Gang membership and the gang lifestyle "was an accepted part of the family." (1RT 237.)

5. DEADLY RIVALRY BETWEEN THE VARRIO GARDENLAND NORTEÑOS AND THE DEL PASO HEIGHTS NORTEÑOS.

Sample testified to two predicate offenses committed by the Norteños gang. Each predicate offense, however, was committed by a different Norteños subset, neither of which was the Detroit Boulevard Norteños, claimed by Zachery. The first predicate offense was a murder case in 2007 where Varrío Gardenland Norteños killed a member of the Del Paso Heights Norteños. (1RT 212.) Hector and Edward Garcia, both of the Varrío Gardenland Norteños, spotted Anthony Amaro from the Del Paso

Heights Norteños. (1RT 212.) Amaro's ex-girlfriend was in the car with the Varrio Gardenland Norteños. (1RT 213.) The members of the two Norteños subsets exchanged words in a dispute, threw bottles at one another, and issued a challenge to meet elsewhere. The Garcias, and two other Varrio Gardenland Norteños, plus other carloads of Varrio Gardenland Norteños, went to confront Amaro and other Del Paso Heights Norteños. (1RT 212.) The confrontation escalated into a fight. The Varrio Gardenland Norteños pulled firearms and shot three Del Paso Heights Norteños, killing one of them. The Varrio Gardenland Norteños later were convicted of murder. The prosecution described this offense as "in-house," that is, one Norteños subset against a different Norteños subset. (1RT 212.)

The Del Paso Heights Norteños were from a north Sacramento neighborhood. Varrio Gardenlands Norteños were from farther to the west near Natomas. (1RT 213.) There were more Norteños in Sacramento than Sureños, which resulted in a variety of disputes. (1RT 213.)

6. PREDICATE GANG OFFENSE BY THE VARRIO CENTRO NORTEÑOS.

The second predicate offense Sample testified about was a 2010 shooting committed by Varrio Centro Norteños against a dropout Norteños member. (1RT 214.) Varrio Centro Norteños members were posted near an intersection when they saw the victim driving. (1RT 214.) The victim was a drop-out from the Varrío Centro Norteños who had problems with these particular Varrío Centro Norteños members. As the victim drove by, one of the Varrío Centro Norteños threw full bottles of beer at the car. Another of the Varrío Centro Norteños pulled a .40 caliber semiautomatic handgun, and fired multiple rounds. The shots hit the victim's car and another nearby car. (IRT 214.) One of the Varrío Centro Norteños was later convicted of assault with a firearm. (IRT 214.)

E. CONCLUSION.

What transforms an organization, association, or group into a “criminal street gang” is, among other things, the words of the statute that require “its primary activities” to be enumerated criminal offenses, and “whose members . . . engage in or have engaged in a pattern of criminal activity.” (§ 186.22, subd. (f) [emphasis added].) The words “its,” and “whose” must relate to the organization, association, or group to survive due process. Here, the evidence was insufficient because it failed to establish any nexus between the Norteños and its six subsets, among the six subsets, or the pattern of criminal activity engaged in by members of all seven groups. The evidence proved only that Zackery claimed the Detroit Boulevard Norteños, a subset of the Norteños. There was no nexus connecting the predicate offenses to his subset, and no showing of shared organization or structure. Accordingly, because section 186.22, subdivision (f), requires this nexus among subsets and set gangs, by imposing an evidentiary relationship among the four elements in the subdivision, the evidence was insufficient to prove the gang enhancement and must be reversed.
