Elizabeth Tam-Helmuth – Senior Analyst, Language Access Services Program, Center for Families, Children & the Courts

Description: Increasing language access includes efforts even before limited English proficient (LEP) court users reach the courthouse. To help better serve linguistically diverse court users throughout California, the Judicial Council and other courts have developed a suite of multilingual materials across various formats to inform LEP court users of language services available in the courts and to provide information on common court procedures. In this session, panelists will highlight these resources and discuss how courts, justice partners, community and faith-based organizations, educational institutions, and other stakeholders can use these materials to assist the communities they serve.
