This report, Part II: Executive Summary of Methodology with Survey Instruments, produced by Dr. John Rogers and Diane Godard, presents an overview of the survey methodology, as well as the questions included in the public and attorney surveys.

Part I: Findings and Recommendations, written by Dr. David Rottman, outlines the main findings and offers recommendations for policy and for further research.

Parts I and II can be viewed at:

The authors gratefully acknowledge the contributions of David Rottman, Ph.D., Principal Research Consultant of the National Center for State Courts, in the design, implementation, and reporting of the surveys described in this report. All aspects of the project were conducted in close collaboration with staff at the California Administrative Office of the Courts under the leadership of Dianne Bolotte, Manager of the Planning and Effective Programs Unit. We are particularly grateful to Lucy Smallsreed, Grants Program Administrator, for her management of the entire project; and to David Smith, Ph.D., Senior Research Analyst, for contributing substantially to the sample and questionnaire design, and for his helpful insights and encouragement throughout the project. Most of all, we thank the 2,414 California residents who made this report possible by contributing their time and thoughtful opinions.

Special thanks are also due to the Foundation of the State Bar of California for a $10,000 grant to the Judicial Council of California in support of the attorney survey; and to the State Bar of California for participating in the development of both survey instruments, and for its overall support of the project.

Overview

The 2005 public trust and confidence survey was designed to measure current perceptions of the California court system held by the public and by practicing attorneys, in order to inform the Judicial Council of California's strategic policy planning process. The survey was commissioned by the Judicial Council of California, Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC) and carried out by the Public Research Institute at San Francisco State University (PRI). A consultant from the National Center for State Courts (NCSC) assisted with the development of survey content and utilized data analysis performed by PRI to develop the findings and recommendations found in Part I of this report.

The primary objectives of the study were to:

- Determine California residents' knowledge, familiarity, attitudes, and specific experience with the courts in their communities and with the California state judicial system overall;
- Measure the public's trust and confidence in the courts in their community and in the California state judicial system as a whole;
- Determine if and why levels of public trust and confidence may systematically vary by experiences with the court system, demographic variables, and other factors;
- Measure practicing attorneys' trust and confidence in the California state judicial system, and identify similarities and differences between the views of attorneys and those of the public.

To address these questions, PRI conducted a statewide telephone survey with a random sample of 2,414 California households and a companion Internet and telephone survey with a random sample of 527 practicing attorneys. The surveys took place between November 2004 and February 2005. The surveys were designed and conducted to follow the "best practices" set by leading opinion survey research practitioners and professional associations.

Sample Selection

The public survey was designed to acquire a representative sample of the California household population, allowing for representation and comparisons of major demographic groups within California. This goal determined the sample size objectives: 1,200 interviews representative of the general population, plus 400 additional interviews within each major ethnic group (Hispanic/Latino, African-American, and Asian-American residents of California), for a projected total of 2,400 completed interviews. The sample was purchased from a commercial vendor of random-digit telephone numbers, and was designed for the closest possible equivalence to the residential household population of California.

Half of the initial sample was drawn from telephone numbers generated to represent each California county in proportion to the state population. Additional samples were drawn from areas with at least 30% density of African-American or Asian-American residents. Projections from census data suggested that sufficient interviews would be obtained from Hispanic/Latino respondents without any special sampling procedures, so there was no additional sampling for this group.

The attorney survey was designed to acquire a representative sample of California attorneys who are practicing members of the State Bar of California. The State Bar of California provided PRI with a random sample of 3500 practicing attorneys from its active member list. This sample size was intended to produce approximately 500 completed interviews from e-mail and telephone contacts.

Questionnaire Development and Pretest

The entire project team collaborated to design the survey questionnaires. The team included AOC and PRI staff members, the NCSC consultant (David Rottman), and a representative of the State Bar of California (Victor Rowley). The project timetable called for both surveys to be completed no later than February 2005, with preliminary results available by March 2005.

The development team met regularly from early August through November, 2004. Prior statewide and national surveys of public and attorney trust and confidence in the judicial system were reviewed in detail to inform the development process. The core topic areas covered by the final public survey instrument include:

- Knowledge of and familiarity with the courts;
- Expectations of the courts' roles and responsibilities;
- Levels of trust and confidence in the courts, and reasons for these levels;
- Evaluation of existing and proposed California court services and attributes;
- Types of experience with the courts and impacts of this experience on evaluations;
- Other demographic factors and respondent attributes, such as age, income, political orientation, country of birth, and racial or ethnic identity.
- Frequency of conducting business with the courts;
- Primary practice area and firm characteristics;
- Use of Internet and other methods of business contact with the courts and satisfaction with those contacts;
- Rating of specific services of the State Bar of California.

The attorney survey content was designed to address the same set of core issues using a reduced set of questions in order to minimize the time required of respondents. In addition to items in common with the public survey, the attorney survey assessed:

Both surveys were developed through an extensive series of drafts and revisions, and were programmed for administration with PRI's Computer-Assisted Telephone Interviewing system (CATI). The attorney survey was also programmed to be self-administered via the Internet.

The public survey was pretested with 49 interviews from November 10 to 13, 2004, and final revisions were executed upon review of pretest results. In order to minimize intrusions upon attorneys' time during business hours, the attorney survey was carefully reviewed but not pretested in advance of the main survey administration. Both surveys were reviewed and approved by the San Francisco State University Committee for the Protection of Human Subjects before any interviews were conducted.

Results and Analysis

Data collection for the public survey began November 23, 2004 and ended February 19, 2005. Active telephone numbers in the sample were dialed up to 29 times to ensure adequate response rates and to contact hard-to-reach respondents. Refusal conversion specialists made up to two conversion attempts to recruit reluctant respondents. Interviewers reported a high level of engagement by respondents in the comparatively long telephone interview (the average interview time was 26 minutes).

The total number of completed interviews in the public survey was 2,414. Interviewers completed 367 surveys with residents who self-identified as African-American, 313 with Asian-American residents, 553 with Hispanic/Latino residents, 1,141 with Caucasian residents, and 16 with residents of other or unknown ethnic identity (subtotals include individuals selecting multiple ethnicity categories). Bilingual interviewers conducted 309 of these interviews in Spanish, 50 in Cantonese, and 18 in Mandarin. PRI's interviewer team achieved an overall response rate of 30%. Supervisors monitored 10% of completed interviews.

Data collection for the attorney survey began January 18, 2005 and ended February 14, 2005. Attorneys were first contacted by U.S. mail with a letter from the president of the State Bar of California, inviting them to take the survey online. PRI conducted follow-up telephone calls to those who did not respond to the initial mailed request. Most (465) California attorneys self-administered the survey using the Internet. PRI interviewers administered another 62 surveys over the telephone, for a total of 527 completed interviews. The average interview time for the attorney survey was 17 minutes, including both telephone and web-based responses.

PRI performed a series of statistical weight calculations to adjust the final public sample to approximate the 2000 U.S. Census on age, gender, and ethnicity and to adjust for other selection factors, such as the greater selection probability of respondents in certain areas. A complete description of weighting and other statistical procedures used is available in the main methodology report (available from AOC)

Margins of error indicate the statistically expected range of variation for survey results. For example, with a margin of error of $\pm 3\%$, if 43% of the population provides a particular answer, we have 95% confidence that the "true" population percentage falls between 40% and 46%. Margins of error can vary between specific questions and subgroups.

The average statewide margin of error for the public survey is estimated at $\pm 3\%$ with 95% confidence, after adjustment for sampling and weight factors. The overall statewide margin of error for the attorney survey is $\pm 4\%$ with 95% confidence.

For both surveys, PRI research staff compiled, reviewed, and documented the full range of collected data for submission to AOC. After compiling the basic weighted frequency listings for each item, PRI conducted a series of analyses for David Rottman, the NCSC consultant producing the report of substantive survey results. These analyses included the development of measurements for key constructs (for example, trust and confidence), multivariate regression models for identifying relationships across many factors at the same time, and specialized analyses to account for the effects of statistical weights on the precision of results.

Organization and Project Staff

The Public Research Institute (PRI) is a research unit at San Francisco State University and has operated there throughout its 20-year history. PRI provides research services to government agencies, non-profit organizations, and academic researchers in the Bay Area and across California. PRI staff members and faculty associates offer expertise in the full range of social science disciplines, including survey research, psychology, sociology, public health, public administration, community development, urban planning, and statistics. PRI operates its own 25-station center for telephone survey research with state-of-the-art equipment and software for integrated Internet and telephone-based data collection.

John Rogers, Ph.D., Associate Director, directed the project and supervised all work. Rogers has authored six peer-reviewed publications on survey research methodologies and other articles in the fields of public health and social psychology. He has more than fifteen years of experience with all aspects of large survey projects from research design to publication. Rogers received a Ph.D. degree in Social Psychology from the University of California, Berkeley in 1999.

Diane Godard, M.A., Senior Research Associate, administered the survey design, including programming, sample and data management, and report writing. Godard has more than fifteen years of experience in survey research design, implementation, project management, data analysis, and reporting. In 2002, she directed a study for the Administrative Office of the Courts assessing the impacts of the Early Mediation Pilot Program. Godard received an M.A. degree in Social Psychology from San Francisco State University in 2001.

Kevin Adcock, B.A., CATI Lab Manager, conducted the recruitment, training, and supervision of telephone interviewers. Mr. Adcock has over nine years of successful supervisory experience with more than 70 social research projects. Adcock received a B.A. in Communications from California State University, Hayward in 1979.

Key facts about the public survey:

- 2,414 telephone interviews, conducted between November, 2004 and February, 2005
- Additional sampling of African-American (367), Hispanic/Latino (553), and Asian-American (312) respondents, for stable estimates of these populations
- Interviewing in Spanish (309), Cantonese (50), and Mandarin (18) languages
- Extensive quality control measures (10% of all interviews monitored)
- Statistical weights calculated to adjust for sampling probability and nonresponse

Public Trust and Confidence Instrument

INTRODUCTION [TIME1]

S1

Hello, my name is INTERVIEWER and I'm calling from San Francisco State University on behalf of the California State Courts. We're not selling anything or asking for money. We're conducting a short survey funded by the State of California on how people feel about their courts. Your number was randomly selected from among all California households. May I ask a few questions to see if you are eligible to participate?

The phone numbers we call have been selected at random to make sure we reach an accurate sample of the population. While participating will not benefit you directly, it's important all Californians have a chance to share their views on the state courts. The leaders of the Courts would very much like to know your thoughts about how justice is served in California. They will use the information to improve court services for you and other Californians.

Hello, my name is [INTERVIEWER] and I'm calling from San Francisco State University on behalf of the California State Courts. We are not selling anything or asking for money. We're conducting a short survey funded by the State of California on how people feel about their courts. Your phone number was randomly selected from among all California households.

INFORMED CONSENT

S5

The leaders of the California State Courts would very much like to know your thoughts about how justice is served in California. They will use this information to improve court services for you and other Californians. This survey is completely voluntary and takes most people about 15 minutes to complete. There are no penalties for not participating. You may decline to answer any question, and you may withdraw at any time. While your answers, combined with those of other participants, will be used to improve court services, there are no direct benefits to you personally. All of your answers will be kept confidential. We do not know your name, and your responses cannot be linked to your identity in any way. With your permission, we will begin.

SUBJECTIVE KNOWLEDGE OF COURTS [TIME3]

Q6

Now for the next questions, let's focus on just the California courts. While the entire justice system includes courts, judges, lawyers, police, civil and criminal justice at both the state and federal levels, for these questions, I'd like you to think about just the state courts. By this I mean the judges, their staff, and clerks who work in California courthouses, but not the police, prosecutors, or lawyers. OK? Which of the following best describes how familiar you are with the California State court system? [READ LIST]

- 1) Intimately familiar: know many details about the court's operation and organization
- 2) Broadly familiar: know some details about the court's operation and organization
- 3) Familiar: know about the court's operation and organization in general terms
- 4) Somewhat familiar: know very little about the court's operation and organization beyond location, name, etc.

- 5) Not familiar at all
- 8) DON'T KNOW

Attorney Trust and Confidence Instrument

INTRODUCTION

S1 (PHONE ONLY)

Hello, my name is [INTERVIEWER] and I'm calling from San Francisco State University on behalf of the California State Courts and the State Bar of California. We are not selling anything or asking for money. We're conducting a brief survey, funded by the State Courts, to find out how attorneys practicing in California feel about the state courts. You were randomly selected from among all practicing attorneys in the State of California. You were recently sent a letter from the President of the State Bar encouraging you to participate. Is this a convenient time for you to be interviewed, or would you like to schedule a time for us to call you back? The survey is also available on the Internet, if you would prefer to take it online.

INFORMED CONSENT

S3 (PHONE)

The leaders of the California State Courts and the State Bar would very much like to know your thoughts about how justice is served in California. They will use this information to improve court services for both attorneys and members of the public. This survey is completely voluntary and takes most respondents about 10 minutes to complete. There are no penalties for not participating. You may decline to answer any question, and you may withdraw at any time. While your answers, combined with those of other participants, will be used to improve court services, there are no direct benefits to you personally. All of your answers will be kept strictly confidential. With your permission, we will begin.
