- How the Council advocates on behalf of the branch

Legislative Office Structure

Have you ever wondered...

- Who come up with bill ideas?
- Who helps the legislator vote on bills and budget requests?
- How does the Council interact with these individuals?

Scheduler

Capitol Office staff typically:

- Review bill ideas that are presented by advocates & stakeholders
- Develop their own bill ideas
- Help the legislator decide what bills to author/carry in their legislative package.
- Review legislation to advise the members if they should vote for or against a bill or budget issue.

Committee office staff

For Democrats:

Committee Consultants

For Republicans: Caucus Staff

Caucus Consultants

District office staff

District Office(s)

District Director/Chief of Staff

District Representatives

The takeaways:

- Lawmaker's capitol office staff draft bills and are responsible for guiding the bills through the legislative process.
- Committee staff are generally responsible for the policy areas that the bill impacts. They work with stakeholders and the authors office to modify bills to address these concerns.
- District office staff are responsible for constituent case work and addressing issues within the legislator's district.

Audience

Legislators and staffer concerns:

- Constituents
- Influential people
- Organizations
- Political concerns

Advocacy

How will the bill impact the courts:

- Mission
- Case types
- Funding
- Countering
- Follow-up

Fiscal impact of a bill

- Understand impacts to workload and operations
- Use relevant data and cost model to develop estimate.
- Back up with relevant examples
- Ensure estimate is in line with similar bills.
- Defensible

The takeaways:

- Engaging with the legislature does not guarantee that they will appreciate the branch's concerns on a bill.
- Positive interactions should lead to legislator's and staff who are more aware of our issues, and helps build long-term relationships.
